Who We Are

The Offshore Energy Research Association of Nova Scotia (OERA) is an independent, not-for-profit contract research organization that was established in 2006 to support offshore geoscience, environmental and marine renewable energy research and development. Its mission is to lead energy research that enables the sustainable development of Nova Scotia's offshore energy resources through strategic partnerships with academia, government and industry. OERA's purpose is to reduce the risks related to investments in Nova Scotia's offshore energy resources through the provision of a range of research initiatives.

Frequently Asked Questions

- I missed the application deadline. Are late applications accepted?
Applications must be submitted by the deadlines specified. Late applications will not be considered as we start assessing applications right away with the goal of completing the assessment process in a timely manner. If you missed the deadline, you are encouraged to apply to the next round.
- I applied and was approved for funding during the first round for the year. Can I apply again in the next round?
Students can receive only one award per funding round (i.e. undergraduate, graduate or post-doctorate). If you received funding during one round, your application will not be considered in the next round.
- I applied but my application was not successful. Can I apply again in the next round? What options do I have?
If your application was not successful, you are encouraged to apply again in the next round or subsequent rounds, depending on appropriate travel plans. Students are encouraged to pursue other sources of funding as well.
- How will I know whether or not my application was successful?
All applicants will be notified by email with the decision within five days following the application deadline.
